so it was not difficult for Dr. Carpenter to estimate the size from the portions of the wing. The giant lineset was a member of a group known as Protodonata and lived in the Permian Age about 150,000,000 years ago. Insects of this type, with long thin bodies and thin wings, were the most powerful that were lived and masters of the air in their time, scientists agree. They were among the swiftest of insects and because of their great strength could cover great distances in one flight. They lived, off smaller insects, as no birds or mammals lived in that age.

Safeguarding Democracy

"If our democracy is to survive, the whole voting public must be educated, so as to use the rational, sclentific mode of approach to all our problems, instead of the emotional, superstitious and 'hunch' mode of approach. When Dr. Robert Millicin, eminent American physicist and scientist, made this statement recently in a letter read at a congress of the American Institute in New York, he said a great deal in a few words, and while, no doubt, he had social and economic problems as they exist in the United States in mind nevertheless the philosophy contained in his words is equally sound and applicable when considered in the light of the problems and conditions which confront the people of this country.

For no matter what problems exist, and without any limitation of their geographic or ethnologic application, it is axiomatic that they cannot be solved satisfactorily unless the ray of clear reason and logic is focussed upon them rather than a diffused floodlight of passion and emotion. In other words, it is only after the problems which cry aloud for solution have been placed under the microscope and subjected to scientific analysis to determine what they "made of, that it is possible to prescribe an effective cure.

If, on the other hand, people allow their emotions to run away with to determine what they made or, that it is possible or present of effective cure.

If, on the other hand, people allow their emotions to run away with sober reflection and sound judgment, no matter how landable those emotions may be, no matter how fine even the impelling motives, it is a sine qua non, that the conclusion-reached will nine times out of ten be wrong and the goal to be achieved further removed and subsequently more difficult to attain. For misdirected effort surely leads to more complicated and most undestrable consecuences.

attain. For misdirected effort surely leads to more computated and most undesirable consequences.

In their turn undesirable consequences can do nothing but promote unrest, dissatisfaction and despair, and when these moods have been induced people are apt to turn to:anything that offers in the hope of finding relief, even to the extent of surrendering liberties which have been bought at even to the extent of surrendering liberties which have been bought at great cost.

All this, no doubt, Dr. Millikin had back of his mind when he wrote his dictum that the existence of democracy is threatened for the peoples who fail to apply science and reason to the solution of their problems. This does not by any means contradict the assertion that sentiment and emotion have their part in determining the destinies of individuals and nations. Indeed, not only have they a part to play, but without these forces the world would be a sorry aphere, but they require as a governor, rational thinking and logical decisions, so that they may be directed along right and useful channels.

Once retinguism has notified the way to the solution of the problems.

the woria would be a sorry spacer, out they require as a governor, rational thinking and logical decisions, so that they may be directed along right and useful channels.

Once rationalism has pointed the way to the solution of the problems which vex the soul, then is the time to call into play the finer emotions of burning zeal and enthusiasm to enkindle others, and it is a sade assumption that causes lighted from the beacon of incontrovertible fact and entenched wisdom are those which will ultimately prevail in the minds and hearts of the multitude.

Believed Link With Hittites

Relic Found In 4,000-Year-Old Tomb In Asia Minor What is believed to be the first

What is believed to be the first step toward the discovery of the lost Hittles, who appear in the Bible as a great imperial power, has just been found in Asia Minor. In a 4.000-year-old tomb was discovered a Hittle statue of a bull, seven inches high and iniald with gold. The silver smith's art is astonishingly modern, and indicates that the race was cultured rither than primitive as previously believed. The discovery has aroused great interest among European archaeologists because previously nothing had been known of the Hittles' work except rock carving and a few potsleries. The relie was exhibited recently in London.

Tourist Are Collectors—

Hotels Lose Many-Different Articles
To Souvenir Hunters
Souvenit-hunting, and not a desire to steal, is accountable for most of the odd thefts by hotel guests. Victoria, B.C., hotelmen claim.
Many and varied are the things which disappear. Towels head the list. One hotel estimates out of 15 dozen towels purchased last summer, five dozen already have been carried off. Thirty dozen towels is the average annual loss for a hotel.

Siliverware and teaspoons come a close second. Salt shakers and sugar bowle are also popular collectors picces. Rarer souvenirs are light builds, telephone books, tumblers and Gldeon Bibles.

Some hotels reported losses of sheets and blankets. One enterprising guest carried away the glass-headed screws which held the mirror in his bathroom.

Finding soap in the bathroom after a guest has left is a pleasant surprise to most hotelmen. Collectors with a penchain for room keys are the biggest trouble. Some men have been known proudly to display collections of several dozen keys gicked up in hotels.

The king is expected to subscribe to the accession declaration in the autumn. This oath ensuring the maintenance of the Protestant religion by the crown, must be made by the sovereign on the day of the meeting of the first parliament after accession or at the coronation, whichever comes first. Before the coronation parliament will probably enter the new session. Therefore the declaration will be "made, subscribed and audibly repeated" by the king at the opening of the new session.
